An Evening of Professional Development Best Practices for K-12 Educators

Research on teacher professional development points to the importance of improving both teacher learning and student learning through professional development opportunities. High quality programs build not only teacher content knowledge, but also work to establish collaborative relationships, coherent scaffolding of information, and the skills to implement the work into the classroom. Thomas More College's Education Department is working to provide these high quality opportunities to local educators through their second Evening of Professional Development.

Thursday, April 24th, from 4pm to 6pm, Thomas More College Education Faculty invite you to a free Evening of Professional Development. Join the faculty in Thomas More College's Science Lecture Hall to start the evening as they explore a wide range of professional development topics around the theme of BEST PRACTICES meant to address your educational needs and improve your work in the classroom. Multiple session topics will be offered for you to choose from during two fifty-minute sessions. Register for the event by emailing your name and contact information to:
