Project Overview

The Compassionate Schools Project is a five-year research project funded through a gift fund to the University of Virginia and administrated within the Youth-Nex Center/the Curry School of Education.

The project focuses on developing and implementing a health education curriculum for students, grades K-5, that combines mindfulness training, learning postures that help with awareness of the body and self-control, social and emotional skills that increase emotional awareness, perspective taking, self-control, working well with others, and nutrition information that promote healthier eating habits. The research interest is in testing the benefits of such a curriculum for children's health, behavior, academic engagement and achievement.

An accompanying component is that all teachers in participating schools where the program is offered will be offered a voluntary mindfulness and yoga class 3-4 times per week during the year instruction is offered. Participating JCPS schools for the first year include:
