One-Page Reference: Prime Time Family Reading Time Program

Prime Time is a family literacy program that connects literature to the real world and builds enthusiasm around reading and discussing books. Prime Time seeks to engage families who are economically vulnerable, have low-literacy skills, or have limited or no English abilities. The program is designed for families with children who are 6- to 10-years old who have been identified as having poor reading ability.

Prime Time programs are conducted in 90-minute sessions, weekly for six weeks. A professional storyteller uses the provided children's literature to demonstrate effective read-aloud techniques. A Prime Time Scholar leads lively discussions on the books' humanities themes including fairness, greed, courage, dreams, etc. Multilingual Prime Time programs are tailored to the needs of non-English speaking families.

Prime Time, a nationally award-winning program, was originated by the Louisiana Endowment for the Humanities, the Louisiana counterpart of the Kentucky Humanities Council, with support from the American Library Association and the National Endowment for the Humanities. Brought to Kentucky in 2004 by the Kentucky Humanities Council, Kentucky's programs have been in 79 of Kentucky's 120 counties and have reached more than 9,900 participants statewide. The Council has established a history of Prime Time in public libraries in Kentucky.

Prime Time targets 15 families per school, or approximately 40 to 50 family members. Prime Time families are not just underserved, but often "never served" families, many of whom have never visited a library, have no books in the home, and might not place a high value on or possess the confidence for parental involvement with reading and education.

Prime Time differentiates itself from other literacy programs because of the humanities content and intellectual value through its focus on themes found in award-winning children's books and the discussion between parents and children of contemporary, yet timeless, issues. Themes include fairness, courage, greed, doing the right thing, coping, and prejudice. Trained storytellers and discussion leaders provide examples of reading books aloud and then ask open-ended questions elicited by the stories. At the end of each week the families in Prime Time borrow three more books to read together at home before the next meeting.

Adult literacy rates are important because learning starts at home. If parents have low literacy levels their children are less likely to acquire high literacy levels. While Prime Time targets youth between the ages of 6 and 10 with low literacy skills, it is also designed to involve their whole families. The younger siblings are provided with preschool activities that are centered on reading and learning at the appropriate age level. The targeted children and parents participate in the six weekly sessions filled with good books, thoughtful discussion, and fun to help them form the habit of reading and discussing books together. We know from our 13 years of conducting Prime Time programs that families don't want to see the program end and report that they change the way the read together and talk about books together. Books are introduced into the home each week and gift books are provided to the families at the end of the program.
