KYMEA Embraces Technology

The adage that necessity is the mother of invention certainly encompasses the speed at which innovation and technology move forward. As one looks back at history, it becomes evident that speed has grown exponentially. It took the airplane 68 years to reach 25% of the market, the television was 22 years, the personal computer was 14 years, and the iPhone took less than 3 years. Technology and innovation are things that society as whole has come to expect, something that is taken for granted, but comes straight to the forefront when disrupted. Strides in technology and innovation have made access to data seamless. Just like the rest of the world, utilities rely on this data to assess problems when they arise, to bill appropriately, plan, and to give customers more control of their usage

Here at KYMEA, we have embraced technology in the way we capture meter data and how we share access to this data internally and externally. By use of cellular Rmmunications, KYMEA is able to pull each members' load data from the Schneider PowerLogic ION8650B meters on a real-time basis.

Members and Staff can access this data anywhere with accessibility to the internet, WIFI or cellular. This can be done on a computer, tablet or a smart phone. This data can be used for reporting, billing or just for information. In the event of communication issues between the cellular routers and PME, KYMEA now has the ability to remotely access both KYMEA's and LG&E/KU's modems to reset in lieu of physically sending someone to diagnose the problem. Of course, all this data must be put into a useful format which is where the Power Monitoring Expert(PME) software comes in. PME scrapes all of this data together and allows it to be presented in common formats like Excel.
