Program specifics

Below is the logic model for the TECH-nique program:

Program: TECH-nique, Inc./JCPS Academies of Louisville

Situation: Lack of female representation in the technology concentrations of the JCPS Academies of Louisville

Inputs	Outputs		Outcomes – Impact
	Activities	Participation	Short	Medium	Long
TECH-nique workshop facilitator	Raspberry Pi workshop	Female ninth grade students from 12 of the Academies of Louisville that are recommended by their teachers	120 hand-selected female ninth grade students receive an experience that is engaging and authentic in the domain of computer science	At least 50% of TECH-nique participants choose IT path in AoL and if they do, they don't experience isolation because they are moving through with cohort formed from TECH-nique.	Increase in participation of females in the technology concentrations of the JCPS Academies of Louisville
TECH-nique paid high school senior assistants	E-textiles workshop		JCPS high school seniors have meaningful employment in technology sector	At least 50% of high school senior TECH-nique assistants choose a college major/career that has some sort of technology component.	Having heard about TECH-nique from personal connections and social media posts of their friends, other females choose TECH-nique and the IT programs of AoL.
10 female ninth grade student participants from 12 schools	3D printing workshop	TECH-nique-employed female seniors from JCPS serving as workshop assistants	JCPS high school seniors serve as near-peer mentors to the ninth graders	All ninth grade participants AND senior assistants report increased CS self-efficacy (as reported in pre- and post-assessments)	Increase in general self-efficacy of participant/assistants, having participated in a domain where they are typically not represented.
Tri-weekly workshops	App prototyping workshop		Participants are able to see people who look like them (facilitator(s) and assistants), thus increasing their sense of belonging	All ninth grade participants AND senior assistants report increased sense of belonging in CS (as reported in pre- and post-assessments)
TECH-nique curriculum	App programming workshop	TECH-nique facilitator(s)	Increased understanding of technology as a medium of expression and societal problem-solving
Laptops given to participants at end of program	Cognimates (A.I.) workshop
	Website/resume development workshop
	End of program parent/teacher/administrator/community showcase
Assumptions Students will be open to participation, funding will be provided, laptops will be donated			External Factors Participants must be transported from school to their home after the program OR program takes place during the school day (logistics of implementation must be determined)

The program, designed specifically for the Jefferson County Public Schools' Academies of Louisville, includes direct correlation with the Kentucky Academic Standards for Computer Science:

- The tactile activities correlate with specific Algorithms and Programming standards (found in italics after each session description below).
- The program design directly aligns with the Impacts of Computing Standard through a series of discussions in each session (outlined below)

Executive Summary

Introduction to the problem

The technology industry is severely lacking in the number of female graduates in the field of computer science, as only 18% of computer and information science degrees are received by females (Bureau of Labor and Statistics, 2015). This issue begins long before students pick their major in college, manifesting itself as early as middle school. This issue proliferates in high school, with females comprising only 19% of AP CS test-takers. The Academies of Louisville, a new and innovative way of connecting JCPS students to real-world, authentic learning experiences in high school, is experiencing a shortage of females in their IT concentrations. Even though it is open to all JCPS students, thereby providing equal access, girls still aren't choosing IT.

TECH-nique's mission

TECH-nique, Inc.'s mission is to provide a unique computer science learning experience specifically designed for underrepresented groups, to address the sociological barriers that limit their participation. Our founder is a third-year PhD student in Educational Leadership, Evaluation, and Organizational Development, studying the factors that influence the participation of underrepresented groups in the field of computer science. By first examining the extant literature to determine the factors that influence this underrepresentation, we designed a program that seeks to mitigate those factors, issues like low self-efficacy, little to no sense of belonging, and discrimination and stereotypes in the field of computer science.

TECH-nique's program objectives

In that vein, we propose the following: Over the course of seven sessions at each of 12 Academies of Louisville in the 2019 – 2020 school year, TECH-nique will design and facilitate workshops for 10 female ninth grade students, for a grand total of 120 students. We have four objectives:

1. Spark the interest of 120 female ninth graders by providing an experience that is engaging, authentic, and meaningful in the domain of computer science, in order to
2. Create a connected cohort of female students, increasing their likelihood of choosing an IT academy and in doing so, move through that experience with a close-knit fellowship of students, one that was fostered by their shared experiences in the TECH-nique program, and
3. Mitigate forthcoming issues of low self-efficacy in the domain by implementing a curriculum that is rigorous, aligned with Kentucky Academic Standards for Computer Science Standards, and introduces technology as a mechanism for societal change. In addition, we
4. Provide meaningful employment to female JCPS high school seniors who graduated from TECH-nique's summer internship in computer science by hiring them as assistants to the facilitator. The goal is to increase their engagement in the field by facilitating their participation as near-peer mentors to the younger participants. Moreover, we want them to have meaningful work experiences in the technology sector to further stoke their interest in the field.
