Predictions show Stoops has earned SEC's respect

BY BEN ROBERTS broberts@herald-leader.com

The Herald-Leader asked college football reporters from all over the Southeastern Conference for their take on this season's Kentucky Wildcats, who will kick off the 2020 campaign Saturday at Auburn.

The results of the survey show that — despite a tough,

SEC-only schedule in this revamped season — Mark Stoops' UK program has earned plenty of respect outside the state. Here's what those who cover other SEC teams - as well as a few national college football experts — think about this year's Cats.

Parrish Alford, Northeast Mississippi Daily Journal: 5-5 — The loss of Lynn Bowden is massive, but they should be able to run the ball. Mark Stoops has built a solid foundation, and the program won't fall off the map because of the loss of one great player.

Coach: 'Gentleman's agreement' about backup QB not real

BY JOSH MOORE imoore@herald-leader.com

Quarterback Beau Allen was one of only two true freshmen named to the first depth chart released by the University of Kentucky football team for the 2020 sea-

Head coach Mark Stoops left open to interpretation whether Allen outright earned the opportunity to back up starter Terry Wilson at Auburn or was named to that spot because of the eligibility dilemma Joey Gatewood still

"I'm gonna punt on the first part of that," Stoops said

Monday when asked directly about why Allen was slotted in the No. 2 spot.

Earlier in the news conference he shared that there was still no determination regarding Gatewood's eligibility. The quarterback announced his transfer to Kentucky last December after deciding to leave Auburn early last season. Whether he's ruled immediately eligible or not appears to be in the hands of the Southeastern Conference, which has not yet made a ruling, according to Stoops.

In the last week there have been reports of a "gentleman's agreement" between Auburn and UK, contingent on Gatewood not playing against the Tigers in order to facilitate an eligibility decision being made in his favor. Stoops on Monday disputed those reports.

"There's no agreement," Stoops said. "No gentleman's agreement. I'm waiting to hear back from the league."

Ideally, of course, no backup quarterback will be necessary during the Wildcats' season opener or for the foreseeable future. As the first

High school games getting greater play on streaming service

BY JARED PECK jpeck@herald-leader.com

Fans of Fayette County's public high school sports teams will be able to see more games streamed live via a subscription service as they join the NFHS Network and its campaign to stream thousands of events across the country. But the deal could make it more difficult for Central Kentucky's high school sports streaming pioneer, PrepSpin.com, to broadcast Fayette County games.

Bryan Station, Frederick Douglass, Henry Clay, Lafayette, Paul Laurence Dunbar and Tates Creek all have new robot Pixellot cameras at their football stadiums and basketball arenas provided by the digital streaming NFHS Network, which is affiliated with the National Federation of State High School Associations of which Kentucky is a part.

Feeds at Bryan Station, Douglass, Henry Clay and Dunbar have gone online within the last week, although there are still some technical issues the schools are working through. The rest of the schools should be online in the coming weeks, school officials have said.

"FCPS network employees are working with the NFHS techs to calibrate the other cameras," said Fayette County district athletic director Robbie Sayre. Dedicated lines had to be set up at all schools before the NFHS Network could begin calibrating the cameras, he added. "The process of bringing those cameras online is ongoing. At this point it is up to the NFHS folks to get us calibrated."

William Warfield, founder and owner of PrepSpin.com, from left, analyst Mike Meighan, and play-by-play commentator Gary Ball prepared for their broadcast of the Frederick Douglass-North Hardin football game on Sept. 11 at Frederick Douglass High School. The crew does a high school game of the week all season. Above them, at top, is Douglass's new Pixellot camera that also streamed the game on the NFHS Network.

The NFHS camera system automatically tracks and zooms the action on the field or court for appropriate views and can be integrated with advertising and play-by-play if schools desire. Scott County uses the system and cooperates with the Georgetown News-Graphic to provide live commentary on its Birds Nest Network.

Once game schedules are programmed into the NFHS Network's software, the cameras come online automatically ahead of each game and capture the action as well as the sights and sounds. It even integrates with the venue's scoreboard system to show the score on screen when it's all hooked up correctly, so no operator is required beyond the initial setup. The time-and-score feature hasn't been operational in Favette games on the network thus far. Expanded live-streaming comes as high schools are limiting fan attendance because of the coronavirus pandemic. Fayette County limits game attendance for its fall sports to select family members.

PRICE TO PAY

The NFHS Network stream comes at a cost for fans — a subscription rate of $10.99 per month or $69.99 per year. A portion of that fee, 10 percent, can be designated by subscribers to support their favorite school's athletics department. Subscribers get access not only to their favorite team's events live and on demand, but also its entire catalog covering 45 states. The network touts it will have more than 300,000 streamed events this year.

Kentucky High School Athletic Association Commissioner Julian Tackett said he believes it's foolish for teams to allow free streaming of their games when it could be a potential revenue source. And the pandemic has crushed revenue streams for many teams who depend on things like car washes, team sales, restaurant tie-ins, concessions and other promotions to fund their programs — things that have become nearly impossible to do during a pandemic.

According to the NFHS Network, 58 Kentucky schools have the cameras or will be taking advantage of the offer, with 40 schools online.

At the KHSAA Board of Control meeting Wednesday, Tackett talked about the NFHS Network's promotion that provides every school within its membership the opportunity to obtain two free Pixellot cameras (valued at $5,000 each) and be on the network. Schools can choose to install them themselves or pay an installation fee. Tackett sits on the NFHS board of directors.

"I continue to say, 'I do not know why people charge Grandma at the gate, and don't charge Uncle Joe to watch it online," "Tackett said. "The free streaming is a lost business opportunity for schools and at a time when your gate revenue's going to be down."

PREPSPIN IMPACT

Fayette's move online means there could be less of an opportunity for local free streamer

RYAN C HERMENS rhermens@herald-leader.com

A robot camera was mounted near the press box at Great Crossing High School's Birds Nest Football Field in Georgetown. The camera adjusts to the action and live streams games automatically based on a schedule on the NFHS Network.

PrepSpin.com and founder William Warfield to come onto Favette campuses for football, soccer, volleyball and basketball, Warfield said.

Warfield and Frederick Douglass were able to work out an agreement for PrepSpin to stream the North Hardin-Douglass game Sept. 11 on his YouTube channel and Douglass's NFHS feed, so the door is not completely closed, but Warfield believes that might have been a one-time deal.

"It's a sad day (for his company)," Warfield told the Herald-Leader after he got the news his access for those sports might be limited for the next five years as Fayette gets its bearings and protects its product on the NFHS Network. "We've dedicated our lives to covering high school sports in Central Kentucky here, and Fayette County's been a big part of that. I just hate it for the kids that all those extra news clips and things like that we've always submitted to get them national exposure on 'SportsCenter' is not going to be able to happen anymore in Fayette County."

Last year, a PrepSpin.com highlight of Dane Key's one-handed grab in the end zone for Douglass made the ESPN "SportsCenter" Top 10 highlights. It was one of dozens of plays Warfield has submitted over the years.

"I can't argue with it," Gary Ball said of the NFHS service. Ball serves as the play-by-play voice of PrepSpin on its "Game of the Week" and is also the producer and host of the "Scholastic Ball Report" on CWKYT. "It's going to give everybody coverage. They can at least watch a robot camera go back and forth on their field. For volleyball and soccer and all that I understand."

PrepSpin's "Game of the Week," which Ball does with Warfield and Coach Mike Meighan as a broadcast team, raises the streaming level up a notch, they say, with its commentary and ability to do instant replay and postgame interviews. PrepSpin has not covered Fayette sports in the volume now available by the NFHS Network but it has covered various basketball, soccer and volleyball events on Fayette campuses regularly over the years.

Fayette County officials did not respond to questions about their relationship with PrepSpin going forward.

Warfield built Prep-Spin.com from scratch after initially providing play-by-play audio for East and West Jessamine basketball games as sort of a hobby in his time off from RadioShack back in 2007. He quickly saw the potential and demand for live-streamed video of high school sports.

Warfield's business model includes garnering sponsorships for his streamed games and this year he entered into a partnership agreement with Mingua Beef Jerky to help grow the company and continue providing free live streaming of regular-season high school events.

Warfield annually produces the video stream for the KHSAA's state championships in football, boys' and girls' basketball, volleyball, baseball and softball and select games at the smallschool All "A" Classic boys' and girls' basketball tournaments. And he has run the Lexington Legends' minor league baseball live video stream for several years.

Warfield said he welcomes more streaming and loves that more games are online via the NFHS Network. But he's hopeful a deal for future Fayette games on his platform can be worked out.

Until then, PrepSpin continues to cover all Lexington Catholic and Lexington Christian home games and will be looking for other opportunities to stream around Central Kentucky, he said.

REVENUE, EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES

The revenue that Warfield taps into, as Tackett noted, is an opportunity for schools.

While the NFHS Network keeps 90 percent of subscription fees, the real opportunity for revenue for schools could come from advertising on the stream, said network CEO Mark Koski.

"They receive 100 percent of the advertising that they put onto their games," Koski told the Herald-Leader. "And so, you know, all the advertising that they want to sell — they can put logos on the screen and they can have a play-byplay announcer read 30-second spots — those type of things all go back to the school."

In Scott County, where sports from its two high schools are on the NFHS Network, its athletics sponsors pay for a package that includes logos on its stream as well as signage in its venues, said district athletics director

Daniel T. Wells. Scott County also partners with the Georgetown News-Graphic for ingame commentary that goes out over the video stream and is audio streamed for free over the newspaper's website.

It is unclear how Fayette County schools will tap those opportunities in these early stages of getting their games online. School officials have not responded to questions about those ideas.

The NFHS Network began as a way to stream all kinds of school events, from music, drama and band to debates and sports, Koski said. And some schools use the sports stream to do their own student produced play-by-play events, a model he hopes more schools will pursue.

"A perfect model for us would be where a student calls the play-by-play and is a part of the action,' Koski said. "Maybe it's someone who loves high school sports and is not part of the team, but now they can be part of the action.'
