Description of Items

As you see, we have a large number of items that need to go into a decommissioned status. We have not completed a significant surplus in the recent past and in that time, we have purchased a great deal of new technology so I wanted to give a brief explanation of why these items are surplus. The Chromebooks and laptops on this inventory list have already been "parted out" for repairs over the past several years. These were Chromebooks that had reached their maximum operating system, which has long since been outdated. Once that happens we use those Chromebooks for spare parts to minimize repair costs. We have an ample amount of Chromebooks to "part out" in the future, for "loaners" at the school, and we are still maintaining one-to-one status and plan to begin a five-year rotation status. The monitors and PCs are (for the most part) from labs that we had in schools prior to becoming one-to-one. We still have some labs in the district but have downsized those over the years. The monitors and PCs on this inventory list to surplus are due to an unnecessary stockpile and/or they are outdated beyond functional use. The access points are nonfunctional. The iPads on this list are also non-functional as they are outdated, can no longer receive updates, and will not support app usage or downloads. The rest of the items are either outdated beyond use, not functional with our current hardware and software, and/or are no longer functional.

Vendor Justification: Tri-State Escrap

I am proposing that we utilize Tri-State Escrap for our surplus needs for several reasons. After a price analysis, it was clear that all companies were very comparable in what they would be offering us for various types of devices. However, Tri-State Escrap offered a wider variety of items that they will accept such as access points, keyboards, monitors, and batteries. Many companies just purchase iPads and Chromebooks. Another reason I would like to utilize this company is due to the fact that they have representatives that are closer to our location and they will be able to accommodate pick-ups as necessary throughout the year. Many available companies were further away, making scheduling and pick-ups problematic. They also have battery disposal which is a need that we have at present time. In addition, they are HIPPA compliant, and hard drives will be disposed of properly in accordance and they provide a Document of Destruction.
