Norms and Process

Notes:

Norms were briefly reviewed by Dr. Anderson. Groups then had table talk, and shared out. Norms shared out included privacy and depersonalization, as well as being mindful of how items discussed are being communicated with our sub-committees. Another norm was to assume best intentions, as well as to stay on track with the agenda. The final norm discussed was to be able to speak personal truths and respect where a person comes from, as well as respecting the perspective of where each role group comes from. Respect was repeated as an important norm. Dr. Anderson reiterated the importance of attendance, solution based conversation, and the importance of researched based evidence in lieu of "I feel" statements to improve productivity and efficiency of the group.
